

When you hear “PWC,” what do you think? Personal Water Craft? You’d be right, but I don’t know what makes them so “personal.” Personally, I think they’re awesome. Some people might try to argue that they aren’t fun because they have small wakes... to which I usually reply with a simple, “You are dumb.” The PWC is so versatile it’s impossible for it to not be fun – you can do all kinds of things with one. Trust me, I know.

My best friend Matt Manzari called me up the other day and asked, “Hey Reed, you wanna jump your truck?” Of course I said yes, but that is neither here nor there... except that PWC’s are usually cheaper than a big truck, use less gas, and can be just as fun on the water with your buddies, as jumping the more expensive gas guzzlers with four wheels into the air. Even if you live on a three foot deep pond that is only a quarter mile long, you can always throw a PWC in there and build a rail park.

Honestly, PWCs are an essential piece of your on-water activities as well as to the industry as a whole. So do us all a favor and go out and buy one. Unless you have a bunch of money, then go buy as many as you can until you are out of money? Why? ‘Cause I said so, and ‘cause they’re fun! Geez, you don’t have to take it so personally...
